

Join the British Occupational Hygiene Society – and grow a truly global network

The world we live in is getting smaller every day, thanks to new technology, ever growing transport options and businesses that increasingly operate on an international level.

As occupational hygienists, it has never been more important to maintain an international outlook and think of ourselves as global citizens, whether because we work directly for multinational organisations with operations in diverse parts of the world or because we understand the importance of being part of a truly global network for our career paths.

Work-related ill health is a global problem which needs global solutions. Fortunately, as specialists in worker health protection, we have the skills to tackle this unacceptable international burden that harms our workers, our companies and public health itself.

Established in 1953, BOHS, the Chartered Society for Worker Health Protection, has, for well over 60 years, offered global leadership in occupational hygiene, acting as a hub for international progress in the prevention of work-related ill health.

Our members operate in the UK and all over the world, serving as highly respected global leaders at the very cutting edge of worker health protection, exchanging ideas and collaborating in the interests of a healthy working environment for everyone.

For all of these reasons, we would like to invite you, as a member of an IOHA national association, to join our International Partner scheme and become an international member of BOHS.

For just £43 a year, being a part of the BOHS International Partner scheme will offer you:

- Membership of BOHS, the biggest occupational hygiene society outside the United States, connecting over 1700 members in more than 50 countries around the world.
